EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR LARRY LEE RECEIVES HIGHEST HONOR FROM NASW-NYC

The New York City Chapter of the National Association of Social Workers (NASW-NYC) bestowed NYAWC's very own Executive Director, Larry Lee, with its highest honor as a "Top Leader" in the social work profession at its 5th Annual Leadership Awards Dinner on December 1, 2011. The event boasted over 500 attendees, including New York City's Comptroller John C. Liu, and NASW-NYC Executive Director Robert Schachter.

Larry Lee is one of only four Top Leaders chosen for 2011 and one of the 7 awardees since the award category began in 2010. As a recipient of the NASW-NYC Top Leaders Award, Mr. Lee stood out from the pack. While the 6 other recipients have been either heads of federations or leaders in academia, he was the only recipient from an agency. "This is a very important award," said Mr. Lee, "We're really trying to develop a strong agency, and I see this award as being symbolic of that – being a top leader in a top organization."

"In a sense," said Mr. Lee, "this is an award for NYAWC."

NYAWC ANNUAL HOLIDAY PARTY

On December 18, 2011 NYAWC staff and volunteers spread holiday cheer at the agency's annual holiday party. Thanks to the Asian American/Asian Research Institute of CUNY, who offered their space for the second year in a row, NYAWC provided a safe place where domestic violence and human trafficking survivors and their children could celebrate the holiday with each other.

Over 100 former and current NYAWC clients and their children enjoyed the free food and drinks served by NYAWC staff and volunteers from Citigroup's Asian Network. While the mothers relaxed and socialized, their children participated in numerous activities. The children got their creative juices flowing at the arts and crafts table sponsored by the Children's Chinese Book Garden. Santa Claus happily posed for pictures with the children who were, in turn, able to keep the pictures taken with him.

Children eagerly picked up their chosen gifts, made possible through the support of New York Cares and Ernst & Young. “It was so cute to see the children so excited about their gifts – going to the floor, opening them, and playing with them right then and there,” said Ojaswi Kafle, NYAWC Development/ Communications Associate who helped plan the event. Yet, the Christmas gifts didn’t stop there. Thanks to Avon Products, Inc. and Avon Asian Network, who donated gift bags, NYAWC women clients also left with a little something.

But perhaps the best part of the 2011 NYAWC holiday party reflects the best part of the holiday spirit – a spirit of love, peace, and whole-hearted giving. For the second year in a row, all of the participants in NYAWC’s mentoring program for youth exposed to domestic violence volunteered at the party. “Since this is our children volunteering for our event, it’s special,” said Jennifer Chen, NYAWC’s Children’s Program Manager who also helped plan the event, “some of the kids who were complaining about volunteering at first ended up changing their minds by the end of the event. One kid even said he would do it again— for a teenage boy to give that kind of response is something in itself.”

SPOTLIGHT ON STAFF: LAUREN BURKE, ESQ.

I spent my pre-k Saturdays a bit differently than most of my peers, as a toddler crush led me to enroll in weekly Chinese language classes where I was the only non-Asian participant. This introductory class sparked a lifelong interest in the language and its people. I studied in China during high school and college, and returned during my second summer of law school to conduct human rights research. After graduating, I received a Skadden Fellowship to work with Chinese child victims of human trafficking.

I decided to team up with NYAWC because it was the only place my clients could receive culturally competent counseling and case management services. In 2011, NYAWC and I began exploring the possibility of offering in-house legal representation to the domestic violence and human trafficking survivors the agency serves. This plan became a reality when NYAWC received a generous grant to launch immigration relief services last year.

The survivors NYAWC serves have already gone through so many hurdles. Accessing legal services that will help them stay here with their loved ones and embrace the opportunities this country offers shouldn’t be one of them.

As NYAWC’s first staff attorney, I assist 40 to 50 survivors with their immigration needs—in Mandarin if needed! I also provide workshops on legal rights to the women in our holistic wellness program, Asian Women Empowerment, and meet with counselors weekly to answer questions regarding our women’s immigration claims.

I am so thrilled to be able to provide free, culturally competent legal services that allow survivors to remain in the U.S.

Thank you to our runners Cindy Brower, Brent Canada, Susan Choy, Joe DiCioccio, Lily Divino, Mia Fernandez, Norbert Gehrke, Stephen Levey, Maria Lopez, Patricia McCollough, Joanna Paul, Jay Ptashke, Rameliza Ratio, Mariam Reiter, Jessica Rodriguez, Lisa Smith, Emily Strange, Rhodora Ursua, and Isha Weerasinghe. In honor of Valentine's Day, NYAWC clients celebrated the beauty in themselves with the help of Reveal. On February 11, 2012, Reveal volunteers pampered the women by providing head to toe makeovers—from stunning hairstyles and to shiny shoes. In addition to a souvenir of new outfits, the women walked away with fond memories of a relaxing afternoon they truly deserved.

What is the significance of the phoenix?

The phoenix is a mythological bird reborn from fire and ashes. The New York Asian Women's Center chose the phoenix as its logo to symbolize the strength of the women who have overcome domestic violence.
